THE GAME

Five dice are the ship’s five modules. Over five rounds you and your only rival build them together — while fighting, in secret, for control. Each round you commit one card face-down to every module at once, then reveal. Engineers push a module toward launch; Military and Colonists buy you influence over it. But every point of influence is a point not spent building, and two armies clashing on one module set its work back years. Miss the launch deadline and you both die with the planet. Make it, and whoever holds more modules rules the survivors.

WHY IT STANDS APART

-  A prisoner’s dilemma with a doomsday clock. Greed is rewarded — until mutual greed destroys the ship and ends you both. Every round is a real choice between building and grabbing.
-  Real negotiation and bluffing — at two players. Table talk, declared plans, and outright lies usually need a crowd of five. A shared fail-state manufactures that pressure for a duel, in under half an hour.
-  The theme is the mechanic. Develop or dominate, launch the ship or rule its ashes — no gap between story and system. Seven unique specials (Embargo, Espionage, Propaganda...) bend the rules.

Hanamikoji’s hidden-commitment tension, a negotiation game’s voice, and a Cold War conscience — in a twenty-minute, two-player box.

COMPONENTS 37-card deck · 5 dice · influence tokens — a small-box build.

STATUS Extensively playtested. Complete rulebook and full card art in hand. Symmetric, language-light, teachable in two minutes.

Two-player negotiation lives or dies on having enough to bargain over. Extensive play says it does — the dilemma and the launch threshold keep every round genuinely contested.
